

Mori Johnson takes up the issue of 2x2 doctrine regarding CSA as a lesser moral failing than remarriage.

@Linda: In response to your comment...."it boggles the mind that our collective group in the west has considered it fine to permanently remove the privilege of the bread and the cup from divorce remarriage situations BUT have no problem offering it right away to somebody who has viciously attacked children...".

As someone impacted by these rules (ironically due to SA and other forms of abuse and not being able to cope any longer with it nor able to forget after forgiving), I have to say that sitting in meeting with a known or alleged perpetrator and watching them speak from the platform or partake of the emblems is hands down the weirdest thing I have ever experienced. To sit there and be reminded that my sin is "worse" than a CSA/SA perpetrator and even a murderer is quite a humbling experience.

So if I feel this way, I cannot imagine how a CSA victim must feel knowing their perpetrator has faced zero consequences or limitations.
